Houses

By Diane de Anda

iStock/lissart

A bird lives in a little house.
It's hanging from our tree.

Talk about all you see in these photos. Then pull out some of your child's toys and describe their relative sizes. Here's the smallest ring. Here's a bigger one. Here's the biggest.

Our dog lives in a bigger house.
He rests there quietly.

And we live in the biggest house—
my family and me.

Rain and Sun

By Kami Kinard • Art by Vanessa Brantley Newton

Lightning flashes. Thunder crashes.

This poem can reassure and remind your little one that scary thunderstorms do come to an end. After reading and talking about the poem, help your child find the tulips, curtains, toy car, and ball in both scenes.

Rain clouds roll by.
Welcome, blue sky!

Notice where your child looks first—the objects or the picture. Then begin by talking about what she sees. When you follow her lead, she will enjoy this puzzle even more.

Who Is . . .

By Heidi Bee Roemer
Art by Gareth Lucas

Who is singing in his bed?

Who is waiting to be fed?

After you read this story, talk with your child about what he does throughout the day. If your child is talking, reread the story, pausing before the last word in each sentence to encourage him to chime in.

Who is crawling down the hall?

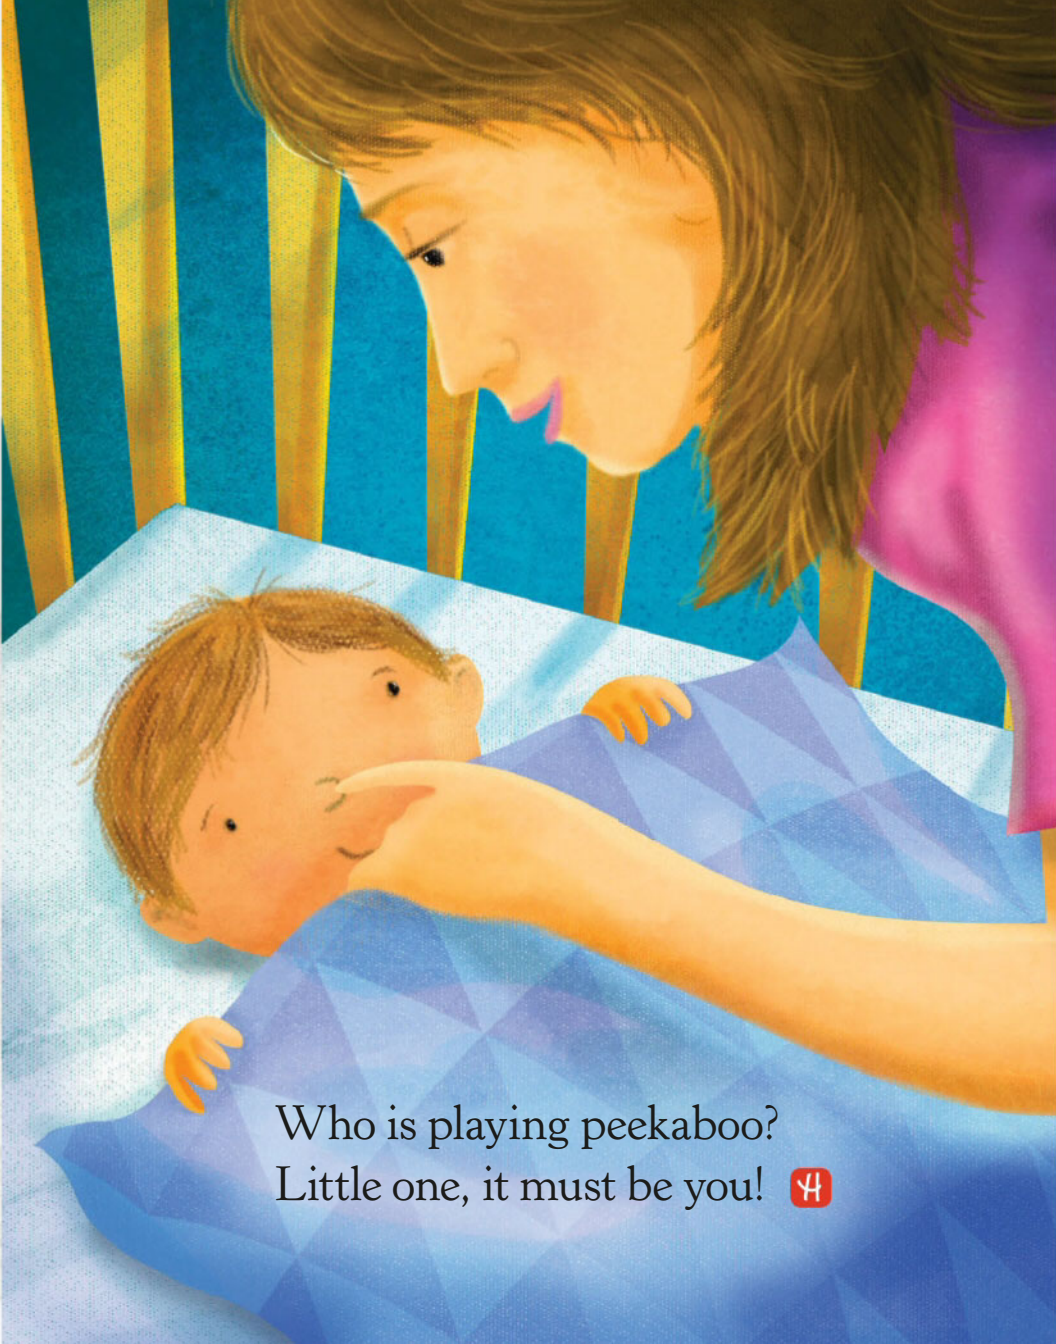

Who is rolling his blue ball?

Who is reaching for my hand?

Who is learning
how to stand?

Who is playing peekaboo?
Little one, it must be you!

Baby Bunny's New Outfit

By Eileen Spinelli • Art by Rose Mary Berlin

Her sweater is blue like the April sky.
Her hat is yellow like a butterfly.
With flowered socks and pink shoestrings,
Baby Bunny is as bright as spring.

As you read, point to the items of clothing mentioned in the poem. Then point to and name other colors in the illustration. And talk about where the Bunny family might be going.
